Membership

How to become a Member of The Reiki Network

Currently, members of The Reiki Network have been trained by Masters who already belong to The Reiki Network and thus have been trained according to our standards.

Masters wishing to join the Network who have been trained according to other standards can do so. The procedure would be to contact a Reiki Network Master Teacher and ask him to become the sponsor for the application. Generally, an applicant would explain how he has been trained, by whom and how they teach Reiki. It is then up to the sponsor to ensure that the applicant is trained to our minimum standards. This is an individual matter between applicant and sponsor. Generally a sponsor may require that all assignments need to be fulfilled to his satisfaction.

The assignments are detailed in a comprehensive training manual which is provided by The Reiki Network. Throughout this period such a candidate would become automatically an associate member of the Network entitling him to The Reiki Network Newsletter. Upon completion of this procedure the sponsor will inform the Network that all requirements and standards are met and the applicant may join The Reiki Network.

If you are interested in joining The Reiki Network, please contact one of our Reiki Master Teachers. The individual members of the Committee are also available as office bearers for further information.

Research

Reiki Research

Reiki and science

As with other types of complementary and alternative medicine (CAM), the scientific community currently regards Reiki as an unproven method. However, there have been many promising pilot studies into the effects of Reiki, reported in peer-reviewed journals. Based on the evidence so far, Reiki is used in several hospitals, alongside conventional medicine, as part of a comprehensive approach to patient care.

Reiki survey

In 2010 Elaine Grundy accomplished a Reiki survey with 546 respondents from over 20 countries.

The key findings of the report showed:

- 87% of people noticed more peace after Reiki
- 80% noticed more happiness
- 80% experienced less stress
- 75% were less anxious or worried
- 73% were less angry

The key criteria for successfully utilizing Reiki is the amount of self-Reiki administered. Reiki is a cumulative therapy; the more hours of self-Reiki the respondent does, the better the results they report.

History

The History of Reiki

Mikao Usui - The practice of Reiki as we know it, was developed in Japan by Mikao Usui (1862-1926) who rediscovered this energy-based system of natural healing.

He named this harmonizing energy Reiki; universal energy, because he had noticed that while giving a Reiki treatment one's own energy is not reduced or even used.

Mikao Usui initiated a number of Reiki Masters including Chujiro Hayashi (1880-1940), a retired naval officer.

Hayashi set up a Reiki clinic in Tokyo and we believe formalized a series of hand positions to use in treatments, as opposed to Usui's more intuitive approach.

Hawayo Takata (1900-1980) who travelled from Hawaii to Japan in 1935, was ill with a stomach tumor and was guided to Hayashi's Reiki clinic rather than submit to an operation. She was healed.

Hawayo Takata Mrs. Takata then persuaded Hayashi to teach her Reiki and to show her commitment, agreed to stay in Japan for as long as he thought necessary.

A year later she returned home to Hawaii. In February 1938 Hayashi came to Hawaii and initiated her as a Reiki Master. She devoted her life to Reiki, teaching and giving treatments.

It is through Mrs. Takata and the 22 people that she trained as Reiki Masters in the period 1970-1980 that Reiki spread around the world and became a most remarkable success story.

Read more about the Reiki history

The healing system that all could use, Usui searched far and wide, from Tibet to America but finally, with no answer as yet, returned to a monastery on Mount Kurama, near Kyoto, went into deep meditation and then had an enlightenment that led to the development of Reiki.

According to this story Usui worked with Reiki in the slums of Kyoto and there he came to the realization that it is important to give people the possibility of personal responsibility. Rather than merely treating people with Reiki he started to give them Reiki as an instrument in their own hands. He traveled all over Japan, taught people about Reiki and attuned them to this energy.

Over time western Reiki Masters have traveled to Japan to find more about Usui. It is now clear that Takata's story is a myth or perhaps one can say an allegory highlighting aspects of Reiki.

Beginning with the researches of Reiki Master Frank Arjava Petter, we now know that Usui was for a time a Civil Servant in Japan, that he then ran his own business, which, whilst initially successful, then began to fail, or perhaps he lost interest. He spent some time as a Buddhist monk; all sources are agreed that he had connections to a monastery on Mt Kurama.

Then somewhere between 1916 and some sources suggest as late as 1922, he developed Reiki. It quickly drew in many people wanting to practice. There is a memorial to him in Tokyo raised through the subscriptions of 2000 of his students. This is perhaps an even more remarkable story than Mrs. Takata's.

There is still much speculation about whether Usui was the originator of the system, or whether he rediscovered it, how closely it is connected to Buddhism or one of the esoteric sects that prevail in Japan. There is no definitive answer, no historical facts. Whatever the source we may be glad that Usui has made Reiki available to all.
